Münchener Künstlerhaus

About Us

“The house shall be a meeting place for all artists of Munich, a center of cheerfulness, advice and serious deed”, said the charter which was read at the groundbreaking ceremony of Münchener Künstlerhaus in 1893 and which was then sealed in the foundation stone. The idea for this house had been created in the circle of the artist association ALLOTRIA where famous painters, sculptors, musicians and important representatives of Munich society had joined together. When prince regent Luitpold of Bavaria inaugurated Münchener Künstlerhaus in 1900, the main idea of its founding fathers had been achieved: a point where artists and society would meet.

In the spirit of historicism Gabriel von Seidl built a neo-renaissance building which quickly became a center of social meetings and thus a contemporary monument to the turning of the century. The bourgeoisie, the families of the brewers and new industrialists celebrated with the artists of the time who had been raised to peerage. Among them Franz von Lenbach and Franz von Stuck who are regarded as the initiators and creative minds behind many grand festivities.

Severely damaged in World War II, the house was rebuilt by Münchener Künstlerhaus-Verein under the direction of the architect Prof. Dr. Erwin Schleich. When Münchener Künstlerhaus was reopened in 1961 by Duke Albrecht von Bayern, this promised a new start in the glamour of tradition. The financing of the building had, however, caused economic problems and thus temporarily limited the presence of Künstlerhaus in Munich’s cultural life. Whilst the house served as a location for many congresses, e.g. of the film and media industry, the original idea of the founding fathers of Münchener Künstlerhaus took second place due to the respective conditions.

Since the overall refurbishment in 1998, many steps have been undertaken to create a balanced synthesis between the original founding idea on the one hand and the economic responsibility and use on the other hand. In doing this, letting Münchener Künstlerhaus for conferences, congresses and family events enjoys the same focus as our own multifaceted cultural program. By converting the organizing institution into a foundation, Maja and Peter Grassinger as acting presidents have further strengthened the idea of the house. Numerous new alliances and initiatives are proof to this new and lively present, allowing Münchener Künstlerhaus to look forward to a promising future.
